

Again I can't keep telling you about the scenery, you will get fed up reading about it. It is however beautiful to say the least. I went through Newquay the capital of the U.K. for surfing and it did look good even with very little wind. Looking on it brought back memories of my wind surfing, after all I spent half of my life in the Navy, but that's another chapter.

The path was difficult at times and certainly the roads were but I have been walking now for a long time and I am getting accustomed to tight roads with very little room to move. The accommodation I had booked was in a particularly nice area, very close to the edge of the sea, but not too close. It was a youth hostel and very nice too. It was very cheap so I used that as my satellite place to get around my other walks. I did my own cooking but I was happy with that. I covered all my areas before moving on towards Bude.

At Padstow I caught the local ferry which was very nice, I was talking to the 2nd in command and he told me that he had been working on this ferry for years. In the morning crossing he is the deck hand then in the afternoon he's the skipper. That's a great idea because you don't get bored that way. So my next destination was Bude here I come. The walk was very nice indeed, but I will tell you about that in my next newsletter. So until then best wishes,

Ian
